

Getting Around in Prague & Sustainable Weekend Trips in Central Europe

Getting around in Prague: Public Transportation

Prague has one of the best public transportation systems in Europe, which means you don't need a car to get anywhere in the city! The system is intuitive and easy to understand. The trams are by far the best way to get around the city quickly. Walking is another great way to get around and experience the city. The city center is dense with lots of attractions, restaurants, and parks, so expect to walk 2-3 miles a day at a minimum.

Prague's Public Transport Network (DPP):

- 26 tram lines & 9-night tram lines
 - Best way to get around city quickly
 - Best tram network in Europe
 - Night trams run from 12am-5am
- 3 metro lines (A, B, C)
 - Access to main train station, large shopping centers
- 110+ bus routes

Sustainable Weekend Trips from Prague

One of the biggest misconceptions about the Czech Republic is that it is an underdeveloped Eastern European country, which could not be further from the truth. It is also much more centrally located than many expect, and weekend trips to other countries by train are affordable and more sustainable than flying. Take a couple weekends to stay in Prague or visit the small towns around Prague as they all have something unique to offer. Below is a list of popular destinations that are easily accessible by bus or train from Prague.

Berlin, Germany	3.5 - 4 hours
Munich, Germany	3.5 - 4 hours
Dresden, Germany	1 - 1.5 hours
Vienna, Austria	4 - 4.5 hours
Budapest, Hungary	5 - 6 hours
Bratislava, Slovakia	3 - 4 hours
Krakow (Auschwitz), Poland	5.5 - 6.5 hours
Karlovy Vary, Czech Republic	1.5 - 2 hours